

ETHIOPIA ACCEPTS THE ANGLO-FRENCH POLICY FORMULA

Mussolini's Hesitancy Continues, However; May Force Discussion

SITUATION IS SERIOUS

Britain Will Have No Other Course If It Duce Formally Declines

LONDON, England, Aug. 1.—Ethiopia today accepted the Anglo-French policy formula for consideration of the Italo-Abyssinian dispute at Geneva, but Premier Mussolini's continued hesitancy to lead reports Britain would move to force full and immediate discussion of the entire crisis before the League of Nations Council. Britain will have no other course, it was stated, if it Duce formally declines to accept the formula, which its representative at Geneva described as "unsatisfactory in a number of details."

The scheme provides for a tripartite discussion under the Treaty of 1906. Should Britain decide to force full consideration by the League, Mussolini will be faced squarely with the question of bolting the Council session as he has often threatened to do in such circumstances.

However, Britain feels that if the program is ultimately adopted, the basis for progress will be laid.

Tax Battle On

Washington, D. C., Aug. 1.—As the $270,000,000 tax bill battle moved to the House floor today, a drive was opened by the progressive bloc to force a 33 1/3 per cent boost in income taxes from top to bottom. Leaders in the movement declared the proposal of Senator LaFollette, progressive of Wisconsin, to broaden the basis of the new tax bill, would be thrust before the House, and the "share-the-wealth" program of Senator Long, Democrat of Louisiana, also was interjected into the House fight over the Ways and Means Committee bill which includes inheritance, gift, corporation and individual income taxes. Meantime, the Senate Finance Committee continued hearings on the House Bill with testimony of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau admitted with keen interest.

Young Morrisville Man Dies at Trenton Hospital

MORRISVILLE, Aug. 1.—A victim of acute leukemia, Joseph Mellodge, 28, husband of Rose Mellodge, died in Mercer Hospital, Trenton, N. J., yesterday. He had been in the hospital less than a day.

The deceased, who was a machinist in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad, at West Morrisville yards, is survived by his wife; by a stepmother, Mrs. Josephine Marraggo; a son, Joseph; two daughters, Josephine and Anna; two brothers, Charles and James; a sister, Mary; two step-brothers, Dominick and John, and a step-sister, Elizabeth.

The funeral will be held Saturday from his late home, 149 Robinson avenue, Morrisville, at 8 o'clock. Requiem high mass will be celebrated at Holy Trinity Church, at 9 o'clock. Interment will be made in Our Lady of Lourdes Cemetery, Trenton.

Morrisville Eagles, to which Mr. Mellodge belonged, will hold funeral services Friday evening.

"CCC" ARMY PUT TO WORK BY REICH

Safeguarding Cities From Food Shortage In Wartime

TO END IMPORTING

By Walter Dietzel
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—(INS)—Germany's equivalent of America's "C.C.C." is tackling the enormous task of increasing foodstuff production by approximately two billion marks annually, and thereby attempts to make Germany practically independent from foreign foodstuff import now as well as in any emergency.

This will be the big and foremost assignment of recruits entering the Labor Service on Oct. 1 for a compulsory period of six months.

Since Germany has to import foreign foodstuffs in the amount of three billion marks yearly, the Labor Service is not only to feed people but to aid Dr. Schacht, president of the Reichsbank and Reich Minister for Economics, in his struggle to counteract Germany's shortage of foreign exchange.

If the German Labor Service comes up to expectations in these two jobs, Germany will probably never again fall victim to a second "hunger blockade" as the one during the War, and will have won her fight against the anti-German boycott of many nations.

The German Labor Service is to turn every available square meter of German soil into cultivated land on which to grow foodstuffs and engage in the execution of a vast reclamation program surpassing all similar projects in the world.

After Frederick the Great ordered the reclamation and cultivation of the Warth river swamps and marshes about two centuries ago, Germany neglected cultivation of soil. Germany was an industrial country, a sea-faring nation and it sought to establish markets all over the world with the purpose of selling her goods there. She did not think of insuring her domestic food supply, and when the world war came terrific food restrictions had to be imposed on her people almost immediately.

As part of the project to increase the annual agricultural production by approximately two billion marks, Labor Service recruits will get the following assignments:

1. Drainage (regulation of rivers, building dams, drainage).
2. Irrigation (digging ditches, canalization).
3. Mixing good and bad kinds of soil.
4. Cultivating the marshes and moorland.
5. Cultivating barren land.
6. Anti-flood construction.
7. Road building.
8. Reforestation.

Latest estimates are that around 21 million acres of land, that is, about one-third of the total available soil of Germany, has to be drained before it will be possible to grow something on it.

Around 3,700,000 acres more are uncultivated moor-land or marshes. 3 million acres total approximately 3 million acres of forests have either to be re-forested or turned into cultivated land for agricultural purposes.

In addition to this kind of work, the recruits of the Labor Service are employed in fighting parasites on all sorts of soil.

At present approximately one quarter million recruits are working in Germany. The expenditures for this service in the shape of accommodation, food, clothing, etc., do not only mean good business for several kinds of industry, but the costs are about recovered by an increased production as a result of cultivation, government officials assert.

These 250,000 labor recruits are getting small salaries and together with the salaries of camp leaders and labor service administration employees, they cost the Reich 20 million marks a year.

JULY GOES INTO HISTORY

Memorable News of the Month Reviewed By International News Service

(By International News Service)

As July goes into history, which of its events are of the most significance, which made the most impression on you?

International News Service here reviews the news stories which received most attention:

Washington

What seemed to be a major defeat for President Roosevelt, the worst dealt him, started the month of July at the capital. Succeeding developments made it doubtful that the set-back was serious. Meanwhile the President looked with glee upon the discomfort of Congress as it sweltered in Washington's oppressive heat, unable to adjourn.

On Tuesday, July 3, the bitterly fought question of the "death clause" in the anti-holding company bill came to a vote in the House.

The Senate had retained the clause which provided for elimination by 1940 of holding companies which control operating companies through intermediary corporations. The vote there was 45 to 44.

The House was given to understand that the provision was one of the administration's "must" items. But it voted to substitute permissive for mandatory dissolution by a vote of 258 to 147.

"Why that I cannot tell," said he; "But 'twas a famous victory," the President quoted Southey the next day at a press conference.

The battle of Blenheim, the subject of Southey's verse, was an important victory. And when the tumult and the shouting had died over the partial victory of those reluctant to deal as drastically with the utilities as the President wished, the realization became general that Congress had nevertheless passed a drastic bill.

A cry of "lobbying" went up from both those who had voted with and against the administration on the "death sentence" clause.

Representative Ralph O. Brewster of Maine, former governor of the state, charged that Thomas G. Corcoran, one of the lawyer members of the "brain trust," had threatened to stop the Passamaquoddy Dam project in Maine if he, Brewster, voted against the death clause. The House authorized an investigation and in it the Corcoran-Brewster issue was quickly aired. A marked difference in the recollections of their conversation on the bill was all that was revealed.

Then the investigation turned on the doings in the telephone office in the little city of Warren, Pa., whose Representative D. J. Driscoll had been puzzled as to why some thousand telegrams from Warren urging him to vote against the bill were almost all from persons whose names started with A and B. It was revealed that R. B. Heron, a representative of the Associated Gas and Electric Co., had signed names taken from the city directory to protest telegrams. The originals of these messages were mysteriously burned.

That gave the electric probe an electric stimulus.

The President, disturbed by a whispering campaign to the effect that failing health was weakening his judgment, took the matter up at a press conference. Reassuring stories were published all over the country.

Augusto Rosso, Italy's bachelor ambassador, was called to the office of Secretary of State Cordell Hull to hear of this country's "concern" over Mussolini's attitude towards Ethiopia.

The President took Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and Senator Millard Tydings of Maryland for a Continued on Page Three

RECEPTION MARKS 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Yardley Couple Celebrate; Former Yardleyite Is United in Marriage

INSTALL CAMP OFFICERS

YARDLEY, Aug. 1.—Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dilliplane, Letchworth avenue, entertained at a reception on Tuesday evening in honor of their golden wedding anniversary. The affair was for the immediate family, and included eight great-grandchildren.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin King and sons, Charles and James, Trenton, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Albert Dilliplane and daughters, Mildred Elizabeth and Eleanor Louise, Miss Elizabeth MacDonnell, Calvin Dilliplane, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dilliplane and daughters, Emma, Helen and Jean, and sons, Arthur and Edward, Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Dilliplane and son Alton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Dilliplane and son Alan; Mr. and Mrs. John Barbour and daughter Genevieve, and Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Dilliplane and daughters, Joy May and Patricia Ann.

New officers of Yardley Camp, No. 197, P. O. of A., were installed at the meeting of the organization Monday evening, by district president, Mrs. Lewis Townsend, Camp No. 89, Bristol.

The officers include: Past president, Mrs. Eliza Brady; president, Mrs. William Allen; assistant president, Pearl Dunsbury; vice president, Sara McLister; assistant vice president, Maude Clarke; conductor, Mary Gokler; assistant conductor, Lillian Evans; guard, Carrie Robbins; sentinel, Helene Strading; chaplain, Elsie Neaman; trustee, Helen Gilmore.

The annual picnic will be held on August 24th at Cadwallader Park, Trenton, N. J.

Yardley Boy Scout Troop No. 1 is spending this week at Camp Buccoo. Fourteen scouts and their leaders are registered in the lookout site, Yardley Scout Camp, for the week. Assistant Scoutmaster James Marion is in charge of Yardley campers, and is assisted by Donald Gallagher, and patrol leaders, Russell Arata, William Gallagher and Robert VanHousen. Donald Clemens is camp cook, while Reginald Brindley will spend part of the week as a leader. Other scouts who are spending the week are: William Beener, John Kurfuss, Jr., Loring Nolan, Donald Cliver, William Nay, Robert DeSau, Joseph Groome and James McNulty.

The Sea Scouts of Bucks County will gather in Yardley on Saturday, August 10th, for a regatta in the Delaware River, near the home of Jack Rembe. The program will include canoe races, tilting contests, ship etiquette, tub races, compass points, board races, and sailboat races. In the evening dancing will be enjoyed. Plans for the affair are being made under the direction of O. S. Penman, local troop chairman in charge of the sea scouting, and Donald Clemens, Sr., neighborhood commissioner.

A number of persons from here attended the wedding of Miss Dorothy Hale Barnett, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Francis B. Barnett, Philadelphia, formerly of Yardley, to Arthur Waldo Pelton, Cronton, Mass., son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Pelton, Saturday, in Christ Episcopal Church, Canaan, Conn., with the bride's father officiating. Victor J. Humbrecht, Jr., organist of St. Andrew's P. E. Church, of which Mr. Barnett was a former rector, played the wedding music.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Francis B. Barnett, Jr., and was attended by Miss Anna McGarvey, Trenton, N. J., as maid of honor. Theodore W. Pelton, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers included Walter F. Pelton, Trenton, and W. Russell Massey.

Electric Rates Cut

Philadelphia, Aug. 1.—The Philadelphia Electric Company today announced a reduction in rates to household users of electric service in this city and suburbs, effective September 1st. The new rates according to William H. Taylor, president, will result in an annual saving of $1,500,000 to clients and was made possible by increased home consumption of service. The new schedule starts at 75c for the first 10 kilowatt hours and reaches a 2c rate on 125 kilowatt hours.

Baby Fatally Burned

Sellersville, Aug. 1.—A two months old baby was burned to death and another child seriously burned here today when fire destroyed the neighboring homes of Harold Gross, 28, and his father-in-law, Howard Heldrith. The child was Shirley Gross, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gross. She was trapped in a second floor bedroom. Breaking out in a public garage maintained by Heldrith, the fire spread to the two frame houses.

Two Drivers Killed

Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 1.—Two automobiles collided with such terrific force on Memorial Drive today, one was overturned and burst into flames and the other hurtled through an iron guard rail into the Charles River, killing both drivers and injuring two other men, one seriously. Dr. David N. Burton, 45, Boston, nose and throat specialist, died at City Hospital after he was rescued from the automobile submerged in 25 feet of water. Harold McNery, 23, Brighton, was killed instantly; William Grogan, 22, Brighton, was found wandering near the scene of the accident and was taken to Boston City Hospital. Joseph Cohen, 20, Dedham, was treated for cuts and bruises. He and Grogan were occupants of the McNery car.

May Turn Detectives

Washington, D. C., Aug. 1.—The Senate Lobbying Investigators may turn detectives later this week. Members of the special committee probing lobbying activities against the pending Utility Holding Company bill today considered going into the field personally to see just how giant power companies work up opposition to the Holding Company legislation. Ashville, N. C., Memphis, Tenn., and Columbia, S. C., were selected as cities to visit. Final decision on the trip will be made today.

RECREATION, HISTORIC INTEREST FOR MOTORIST

Mountains of South Central Pennsylvania Have Much to Offer

POINTS OF INTEREST

HARRISBURG, Aug. 1.—Blue and gray ghosts of Civil War days stalk the mountains of south central Pennsylvania and offer the motorist a day of recreation with a rich dividend in historic interest. Adams County and Gettysburg have been written into the pages of history in blazing letters but comparatively little attention has been given to adjoining Franklin County visited on two different occasions by invading Confederate troops and scene of Lee's retreat from Gettysburg after the Stars and Bars had been lowered.

Monterey, on the summit of South Mountain in southeastern Franklin County, and the adjoining pass which is traversed by Route 16 leading from the Maryland line near Emmitsburg, Md., to the Lincoln Highway at McConnellburg, were temporary havens as the long gray columns beat a hasty retreat from Gettysburg toward the Potomac near Williamsport. Monterey is the center of the South Mountain resort section and boasts one of the largest diplomatic colonies within easy driving distance of the national capital.

A ten-minute side trip to Blue Ridge Summit and across the Mason-Dixon line to the right will offer opportunity to visit Camp Albert C. Ritchie, Cascade, Md., Maryland's new and ultra-modern National Guard Camp. This camp which has been constructed in recent years is reputed to be one of the most complete in the country, offering pistol, rifle and machine gun ranges, a huge mountain tract for reconnoitering and sufficient natural stone buildings to accommodate two regiments simultaneously. By going via Pennersville from Blue Ridge Summit to the camp motorists will pass directly by one of the original Mason-Dixon line markers to the left of the road.

Miss Margaret A. Ennis Dies in Bensalem Twp.

An illness covering a period of a few months, the last seven weeks of which she was confined to her bed, proved fatal to Miss Margaret A. Ennis, daughter of the late Michael and Mary Ennis. Death occurred yesterday at her home in Bensalem Township, which residence was also her birthplace.

Surviving the late Miss Ennis are two sisters and a brother, Mrs. Ella Hogan, Philadelphia; Miss Elizabeth Ennis and Thomas Ennis, Bensalem Township. The deceased numbered many among her circle of friends, and was a highly respected resident of Bensalem Township.

Funeral service will occur on Monday, from her late residence at 8.30 a. m., with solemn requiem mass at St. Charles R. C. Church, Cornwells Heights, at 10 a. m. Interment in St. Dominic's Cemetery, Holmesburg, will be directed by Roscoe L. Horner, Langhorne.

FRUIT GROWERS TOUR BURLINGTON CO. FARMS

See 350 Acre Peach and Apple Farm, Spraying and Preparation of Crops

125 WERE ON THE TOUR

Headed by County Agent William F. Greenawalt, a caravan of 38 cars containing about 125 people, comprising Bucks county fruit growers, made a tour of five farms in Burlington county, N. J., on Tuesday.

The first stop was that of the farm of Clem Lewis, where the group saw 350 acres of apples and peaches. The process of grading and packing the apples was also observed.

Each apple was wrapped in tissue paper, and Mr. Lewis explained to the local fruit growers that he is able to obtain a premium of 25 cents per bushel because of this procedure.

At the farm of Henry Albertson, the caravan enjoyed a basket lunch and also had the opportunity of seeing Mr. Albertson pack apples for shipment to England.

Making the third stop at the farm of Paul Burke, the party saw a special sprayer with a 16 nozzle gun in operation.

A one hundred-acre vineyard was visited at the farm of Lester Collins, and the final stop of the trip was made at the farm of Byron Roberts, where an insect spray demonstration was conducted by the New Jersey Experiment Station.

County Agent Greenawalt stated that the peach crop in Burlington county is practically nil because of the winter killing.

While visiting the Burlington county farms, the entourage was led by Daniel Kensler, Assistant County Agent of that county.

The heavy crop of early apples attacked by heavy infestation of the codling moth obliged the orchardists to spray late in the season with insecticides.

As the result of this the apple must be washed before being marketed.

The cleanest fruit from the standpoint of disease and insect injury was on the farms where the orchardists sprayed with a single nozzle gun both the inside and outside of the trees.

Pottstown, Aug. 1.—A posse of police, Boy Scouts and neighbors searched for Catherine Detweiler, 13, today, who disappeared from her home on a farm, four miles west of here, yesterday, after leaving a suicide note. Police said the note, addressed to her father, Lyman Detweiler, read: "This is the end of my life, you have worked me too hard, I cannot stand it any longer. Give me love to mother. I hate to do it but I am tired of living." Detweiler said his wife works in a bathing suit factory in Philadelphia and is home only on week-ends. They have four other children.

RIVER COMMERCE SHOWS INCREASE IN PHILA. AREA

Net Tonnage is 8% Above the "Normal" Year 1926

1 1/2 % OVER 1933

Tonnage Checked Out of Bristol Shows Gain of 5.3%

Waterborne commerce in the Philadelphia area, which includes Trenton, Camden and Wilmington, recovered in 1934 to a point where, at a total of 30,804,134 net tons of cargo it is 8 per cent above the "normal" year of 1926, and gained 1 1/2 per cent over that of 1933, according to the annual report recently submitted to the Chief of Army Engineers by Lieutenant Colonel John C. H. Lee, district engineer in charge of river and harbor improvements in Philadelphia.

Even as compared with the peak year of 1930, when marine commerce reached a total of 31,315,145 tons, commerce during 1934 was only 1.6 per cent lower, and as compared with the low period of 1932, last year's cargo gain was 11 1/2 per cent.

Values for the period are not strictly comparable, as in some commodity groups an expert estimate was required, and fluctuation in foreign exchanges and commodity markets make the comparison with previous years inequitable. In 1934 the total value of cargo moving in Philadelphia's waterborne commerce is given as $875,939,188 as compared with $733,627,994 in 1933 or a gain of 16.2 per cent, and as compared with the low of $638,568,687 in 1932, the gain is 27 per cent. The decrease in value is 35 1/2 per cent as compared with the "normal" year of 1926.

During 1934, commerce moving directly to and from the large terminals located on the section of the Delaware River from Allegheny avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea totalled 20,280,083 tons, having a reported value of $763,571,583, and showing an increase in volume of approximately 7 per cent and an increase in value of approximately 21 per cent as compared with 1933.

Imports at Philadelphia during 1934 increased 2.6 per cent and exports 10 per cent, with the coastwise trade larger than in 1933 by 11 per cent. Higher commodity prices are reflected in all classes of cargo as compared with the previous year. The principal commodities showing increased tonnage were molasses and sugar imports. Among the exports to show increases last year as compared with 1933 were iron and steel scrap; the movement of coal, coke, petroleum products, and vegetable food products increased in the coastwise trade.

Vessels carrying these commodities in the foreign and coastwise trades totalled 15,311 trips, inbound and outbound, as compared with 14,676 trips in 1933 and 13,654 in 1932. The Army Engineers provide a channel of 35 feet in the Delaware to Allegheny Avenue, and the drafts of vessels using the channel in this trade in 1934 ranged from 8 feet to 32 feet.

Postpone Strike Hearings

Washington, D. C., Aug. 1.—The House sub-committee inquiring into the ship workers' strike at the New York Shipbuilding Company yards at Camden, N. J., today withheld further hearings pending renewed conferences between company officials and strikers. Chairman Griswold said the committee did not want to interfere with any possible settlement of the dispute. "I understand they are trying to reach an agreement during the next few days," he declared. "If none is reached at the end of this time we will probably take action." The committee has before it a resolution of Representative Kennedy, Democrat of New Jersey, which orders the Labor Department to investigate the strike.

REALITIES TO FACE

As we entered a new fiscal year, the treasury reported an all-time record public debt. The amount is $28,700,892,625. That is about $230 for every man, woman and child in the United States. True, the United States is economically strong and vigorous. It can bear a greater burden of debt than that at Washington. But the public debt will be bigger by midsummer next year, several billions larger at the present rate of federal income and outgo. Moreover, the public debt is only a part of the governmental debt under which the people strain. There are mounting state debts, mounting county debts, mounting municipal debts.

To foresighted men such conditions are a warning that the ship of state should be made safe against too great listing. They would do this by legislating not a punitive tax program against one class of the people but a constructive tax program bearing as fairly as possible upon all the people. In this connection, it is noteworthy that fewer than 2,000,000 persons paid income taxes in 1932. To reply that the rest had no incomes upon which to pay, would be to make a wholly incomplete answer. England's incomes, it goes without saying, have been no better than ours in the lower brackets, but her taxpayers have been proportionately much greater in numbers than ours. This is because, through exemptions, we have made our tax base much narrower than Britain's. In 1932, American taxpayers representing about one-fifth of 1 per cent of the eligible voting population paid three-quarters of the total federal income tax. The total of income taxpayers—2,000,000—represented only 4 per cent of the total eligible voting population.

Those figures afford abundant reason for a careful watching of the congressional legislative tax step at Washington. It is incumbent on both the president and congress to make sure of their tax policy before they go ahead. That they can not make sure of it in haste was foregone even before that amazing June week of arrangements and rearrangements respecting the President's tax program. To all it must now be clear, in view of the House's refusal to comply with the President's wishes on the utilities holding bill, that to seek any kind of tax legislation at this session is only to seek more confusion.

HOW TO EAT ASPARAGUS

An interesting dispatch from Germany says the Heidelberg University chapter of the Borussia Fraternity has been suspended for two years for discussing in too ribald fashion how Reichsfuehrer Hitler eats asparagus. There should be more light on this matter.

So far as we know, there are only two ways to eat asparagus—with the fork, and with the hand. Both are accepted in this country, and, we should suppose, in Germany. How, then does Herr Hitler eat asparagus? It seems impossible that he sucks it through a straw, or dissolves it in Muencher beer.

Will some enterprising film service take a reel of Der Fuehrer in the act of surrounding a dozen stalks? If there is some particularly egregious method of eating asparagus, we crave to know all about it.

Soviet savants believe they can lengthen the life span to 150. In the meantime, a 33-year tennis ace is still a "creaking veteran."

SUNDAY DINNER Suggestions

By ANN PAGE

THE outstanding market choice this week is peaches, freestone Elbertas and Hiley Belles being plentiful and cheap. Several cooking varieties of raw apples and blueberries are also plentiful and moderate in price. Fifteen varieties of Western grown plums give ample choice in a wide range of colors and sizes.

Most vegetables are low in price. Butter and cheese production continue at a high peak, maintaining very moderate prices. Average grades of eggs are unchanged in price, the best grade continues to advance.

Broiling and frying chickens and ducklings are excellent values. Lamb continues to be the best meat buy. Fish and seafood are again plentiful and low in price.

Here are three menus made up from seasonal foods adapted to different budget levels.

Low Cost Dinner

Braised Breast of Lamb
Mashed Potatoes
Green Beans
Sliced Peaches
Tea or Coffee

Medium Cost Dinner

Chuck Roast of Beef
Browned Potatoes

THE SNOW LEOPARD by Chris Hawthorne

CHAPTER XIX

Bannister was stunned. For the second time that day Karen Sire had exhibited a wholly unaccountable contempt for him. He could have forgiven the first rebuff; he had thrust himself upon her at a time when she was under great stress; she had not sought his advice or assistance. But this latest performance was a flagrant affront.

"Hod was right," he muttered bitterly. "The girl doesn't regard me as an equal. I'm just an odd sort of fish to her—one to be hooked and thrown overboard after the catch. Tuh! I can't buy a white chip in the game these people are playing. Maybe she had a throne in mind even while I was harping about the pelt of a snow leopard. But whoever, or whatever this Prince was, he's dead now. What's the next move in the game?" He took an elevator up.

Toole had an automatic in his hand when he opened the door to admit his friend.

"Expecting Jeff Whipple?" Dick queried pleasantly.

Toole dropped the gun into his coat pocket. "Just makin' sure," he answered shortly. "That bird has bounced his last blackjack off my dome."

"We might as well fold up and get out of here," Bannister remarked. "Karen's got the stuff she wants and has skipped, leaving Jeff to hold the bag. Metaphorically, we're in the same boat."

"Not exactly. The house has been instructed not to tell Jeff that she's gone. The little lady is presumed to be in her room right now. It won't be long before Jeff finds out what was done to him. Maybe he'll make a call on her."

"Suppose we shift to her room," Bannister suggested. "I'll get Bully to bark a little and he'll think it's the chow. We can put on the lights so they'll shine out on the loggia. He'll notice all this when he comes up from the Rose Room and think that Karen is in the room."

"Would you be willing to go into her rooms and stay there all night alone?" Toole asked.

Bannister recoiled. "Not alone," he said. "What if she returned and caught me crouching in there? What would she think?"

"That's all fixed. You won't be disturbed by anybody, except possibly Jeff himself. Take the boots along if you like."

"What will you be doing all this time?"

"There's a squib in the papers sayin' that I'm in Bellevue with injuries sustained in a taxi collision, as I've told you. Jeff may fall for this and he may not. He has underground sources of information just the same as I have. He may even know that I'm in this room. I'll stick right here and watch. If he enters Miss Sire's room and mixes it with you, I'll be on the job right away."

"I don't get your strategy yet," grumbled Dick. "Karen has the only evidence that would be useful in holding Whipple and it's clear that she doesn't wish it to become public."

"Well, you came into this game to help her, didn't you?" Toole retorted. "She gave me to understand that she'd rather have Whipple holding the stuff than us. Can't you see that she had me hipped for a fall?"

Bannister could not see this and said so. "If you had let me kick Whipple down the hallway, I could have claimed that it was just a plain fight and both he and I would have been arrested. That would give you plenty of time to get this stuff out of his room. Another thing, you pinched him for the line-up and he slugged you to get away. The simpler procedure would be to arrest him again."

"It would," Toole admitted, "if Miss Sire hadn't forced me to change my plans." He looked steadily into Bannister's eyes. "Do we wait?" he asked.

"No!" Dick snapped.

Toole silently handed over a key to the suite just vacated by Karen Sire. Bannister poked up his boots, whispered to Bully, and together they stepped out into the corridor, leaving Toole alone. Opening the door of the darkened apartment, Dick entered and switched on a light, revealing a suite more richly lifted it cautiously. New York is never still, but for one brief interval in every twenty-four hours, something like complete repose settles upon the city. It comes between the night club curfew and the morning milk trucks. That interval had arrived.

The night had become moonless, starless and murky. Bannister be-and daintily furnished than the one he had just quitted. The Dresden clock chimed a welcome to him; a pretty figurine, perched above it, swept a bow. Fragrance—just a suggestion of it to Bannister; he saw no flowers. But Karen Sire had been there.

Bully looked up at him and whimpered. His master felt queer, almost ridiculous. He drew out a small pistol, examined it and thrust it back into his hip pocket. Its deadly accuracy was known to him; with that toy-like weapon he would have regarded himself as a bungler if he missed the eye of a chicken at ten paces.

Bannister next kicked off his shoes. Walking to a window he looked down and far out into the park. Automobiles—thousands of them—whirled and gleamed through the darkness. But even in the midst of this he caught a note of the wild. One long drawn cry came to his ears; only a caged wolf, perhaps, yet—had the beast in the park zoo sensed the presence of a kindred spirit? Would Jeff Whipple stir at the cry and creep out for the foray? The idea altered Dick's strategy—he turned off the lights.

But hours were yet to pass before Jeff Whipple returned to his room. Bannister spent them in tortured inactivity. What if Karen did return? Floating into the room, she would find him there in sox, trousers and shirt—perhaps with a toy pistol in his hand. Bully had curled up on the bathroom mat and gone to sleep long before Dick heard a sound at Whipple's door. Presently a flood of light fell across the loggia—the man was inside.

Five minutes more passed. Dick thought he heard the rumble of a muffled engine. Perhaps Jeff had opened his portfolio and found that he had been dined. Another rumble came. The rumble was unmistakable. The rumble was the floor. The rumble was the floor.

Thrusting the little revolver back into his pocket, Bannister leaped across the room like a puma, landing squarely upon the ghostly intruder's back. Instantly the illusion was gone. He was at grips with a man muscled and thewed like a bull.

visitor to see Pen Mar amusement park, so named because of its location directly on the Mason-Dixon line, and to see on an adjoining knob the famous old Buena Vista Hotel, once a mecca of metropolitan summer vacationers, now the property of the Jesuit Order of Catholic priests who use it as a summer retreat and study house. Venturesome souls may, by a short trip over mountain road, visit High Rock observation tower and obtain a bird's eye view of 22 counties in four states—Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

From Pen Mar the road leads back to Route 16 at Rouzerville and thence across the rich farming lands of the lower Cumberland Valley to Waynesboro, Greencastle, Mercersburg and on to McConnellsburg. A three-minute drive north on Route 11 from Greencastle brings one to the little-known monument in memory of William Rihl, the first Union soldier to die in the Gettysburg campaign. At Cove, just west of Mercersburg one may see the birthplace of President Buchanan although the modest log cabin has since been removed to Chambersburg where it was restored and may be seen.

At Mercersburg the chief point of interest is Mercersburg Academy and its famous carillon. Except in mid-summer, concerts are given each Sunday afternoon. Crossing the Tuscarora Mountain enroute to McConnellsburg one has a reverse view of the panorama seen previously from Pen Mar and High Rock on the South Mountain 30 miles across the valley to the east.

Joining the Lincoln Highway at McConnellsburg the more rugged mountains to the west beckon one into Bedford and Somerset counties with the famous Grand View Level. This route incidentally offers the shortest way from Baltimore to Pittsburgh, swinging through Westminster, Taneytown and Emmitsburg in Maryland and to McConnellsburg and the Lincoln Highway as outlined.

From McConnellsburg one may turn north to Mt. Union and Huntingdon, and from Bedford a short but alluring drive leads to Altoona. Turning north from Waynesboro over Route 997 to Mont Alto and then over the mountain to Caledonia, affords opportunity to visit the State Forestry School and Nursery at Mont Alto and the White Pine Sanatorium on South Mountain. At Caledonia the route may be either right or left over the Lincoln Highway, Route 30. If the left turn is elected, Chambersburg, burned by Confederate troops during the Civil War, offers Wilson College and Penn Hall as attractions; if the turn is right one may visit historic Gettysburg described previously in this series.

Over Route 11 from Chambersburg or Route 34 from Gettysburg one may journey to Carlisle and visit the United States Army Medical Field Service School on the site of the old Carlisle Indian School and one of the most historic spots in Cumberland county. Route 34 offers an opportunity to see Adams county's justly famous apple belt.

These are but a few of the myriad attractions which tempt one from the easy chair and into the great outdoors over Pennsylvania's network of super-highways.

Motorists may obtain the free Road Map of Pennsylvania and free information concerning detours by writing the Pennsylvania Department of Highways, Bureau of Publicity and Information, Harrisburg.

JULY GOES INTO HISTORY

week-end of fishing on which reporters were barred. Result: The feud between the two over the Virgin Islands administration was settled. Governor Paul M. Pearson and Judge T. Webber Wilson, whose differences on the islands was backed by the Secretary and the Senator respectively, were shifted to other jobs. Lawrence W. Crain, 37 year old administrator of the island of St. Croix in the group, an Ickes man, was made the new governor.

In the Nation

The administration lost two and won one important decision in the Federal Circuit Courts of Appeals about the country during the month. In Boston it was ruled that the processing tax, the essence of the AAA plan was illegal. In Cincinnati the court ruled that the condemnation of land by the Federal government for low cost housing did not constitute "public use." In New Orleans the court held that the TVA had ample constitutional authority to sell its surplus power in competition with private utility companies.

All the decisions will be carried to the Supreme Court.

Thomas E. Dewey, 33, the man who convicted the gangster Waxey Gordon, was appointed inquisitor of New York's rackets, gambling and vice, after three others had declined. Major revelations seemed in prospect.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York upheld the decision giving Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney custody (except for week-ends) of her niece, little Gloria, the 11 year old daughter of Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt.

The Army-National Geographic Society stratosphere balloon blew up at Rapid City, S. D. . . . J. E. Hoover, head of the F. B. I. or "G-Men," castigated parole methods before the police chiefs convention at Atlantic City . . . Max Baer said his 12 day marriage was over. His wife said it wasn't. It wasn't . . . Herbert Hoover played host to a number of Presidential aspirants at Palo Alto . . . Terre Haute, Ind., had a one day general strike . . . 78,000 gallons of whisky were destroyed in a fire at the Hiram Walker distillery at Peoria, Ill. . . . The American Bar Association criticized conduct of the Hauptmann trial . . . Helen Wills Moody "came back," and how!

Abroad

The Abyssinian situation rapidly crystallized during the month, making armed conflict almost a certainty at the end of the rainy season.

Haile Selassie, the "king of kings," in the parliament house at Addis Ababa assured his warrior-legislators that "Your Emperor will be in your midst, not hesitating to pour out his life blood for the independence of Ethiopia."

The League of Nations conciliation meeting in the Netherlands which was to determine who fired the first shots in the border incident at Wal-Wal (the seed of the present situation), broke up when the Ethiopian representatives (English, American, and French experts in international law) insisted that the incident occurred within the Abyssinian border.

In a final effort to avert war England insisted, over the opposition of Italy, in calling a meeting of the League Council at Geneva for the end of the month, and then British warships were sent to hover off the troubled area.

The situation was complicated by an amazing incident in the diplomatic relations between Italy and Japan. After a conference in Rome between the Japanese Ambassador and representatives of the Italian government, the Italian foreign office issued a statement to the effect that Japan had given assurances of neutrality in the coming conflict. Next day the Japanese government in Tokio denied that any such assurances had been given. Simultaneously Japanese patriotic societies indulged in demonstrations against Italy, and the Italian press made Tokyo a target.

Anti-Jewish riots again broke out in Berlin. Many titled General Wilhelm Hermann Goering decreed punishment for "political Catholics."

Died: Alfred Dreyfus in Paris. The fight for reversal of his conviction on charges of selling military information had France in turmoil for a generation. George William Russell (A. E.), mystic poet and leader in Ireland's literary and agricultural renaissance.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly

(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — (INS) — Interesting to trace the life of a popular vogue . . . if the public accepts it one year, it generally goes on to the next . . . but with this change; if it was a daytime style, the second season may offer it adapted for evening wear . . . and vice versa.

Those lovely "tree bark" materials . . . worn in woollens last year . . . will consequently be repeated this coming fall, in metals, for evening.

Bette Davis, who has just left my office, is mad about a gray, diagonal, tweed metal cloth she saw there . . . it looked just like the tweed suit she had on, minus the silver thread . . . so she'll wear it in her new picture, "Special Agent" . . . but of course the gown it's made up into will be formal.

New, also, among my own material-choices for fall is another metallic, that looks as if studded with nail heads. I'm saying that one for Kay

Francis, when she gets home from Europe . . .

Then, the material designers have taken this summer's prints, and scattered metal through the design, for fall. They've taken gingham plaids, and done them in metal-and-silk. They've taken the old waffle crepes, and had them interwoven with cellophane. They've taken, in short, a whole array of materials that have already had their day . . . and then given them a new day, a new life . . . by sprinkling through them the metallic threads, so that they shimmer.

You mustn't think that these new metallic cloths have anything in common with the old metal cloths, however. Where the old ones were stiff, heavy, uncomfortable to wear, these are supple, sometimes even sheer, and lend themselves beautifully to draping.

Already on my workroom shelves, ready to be made up for fall, are a blue matelasse interwoven with silver and softly delicate, that I bought for Ruby Keeler; a blue velvet with a yellow taffeta back that seeps through the pile with shimmery effect, that I hope Marion Davies will like; several of the new taffetas that don't crack or split, in the hope that the bouffant style so becoming to Jean Muir and Anita Louise may continue; and a wide range of old-fashioned revivals.

In the last-named collection, there are some names that may gladden the demure, old-fashioned heart . . . and also that of the modern miss that knows she's at her smartest when she looks a trifle quaint . . . alpaca . . . moire . . . silk twill . . . tricotine . . . chenille taffeta . . . and velvets, printed, raised and even changeable in two-toned colors.

Yes, it's an old-world revival we're having in materials, and no mistake. So treat yourself to an exciting hour when you go to buy your fall materials. See if you can trace the vogue that ancestors the metals . . . and take your grandmother along to name the rest!

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — (INS) —

Today we draw an interesting parallel between the orchid and the white fox. First take the orchid. They finally tacked so much silver paper and lavender ribbon on to it that it died an awful death . . . among smart women. And so it was with the white fox fur. Women wore them with black satin dresses . . . eternally . . . in daytime and in evening . . . and so killed them. Eventually only the wrong people were apt to wear them at all.

Now the white fox is returning once more. But on the well dressed woman, you'll never see it combined with (1) beaded materials; (2) spangles; (3) black satin; (4) materials with a sheen. Those are the important "Don'ts."

To be a little more constructive, however . . . white fox can be used beautifully in many ways. With the softer materials, it's lovely . . . Velvets too are good . . . only beware of black velvet and white fox, which can, on the other hand, be very effective on certain people . . . just be careful how you treat it.

If you must have sheen with your white fox, use some of the new lovely metals, which, tailored and conservative in design, enhance the richness of the fox.

Or better still, treat your fox as the orchid is being treated today . . . leave it alone, with no furbelows to detract from its own great beauty.

In the evening cape, a long one of white fox, the skins placed diagonally, will be found a clever design. Carole Lombard, for her own personal wear, has a shorter one that I like tremendously . . . a dropped, V-line in the back . . . two skins running vertically . . . and over the arms, two more skins each, placed horizontally, to form a cape-sleeve.

In her new picture, "Romance in a Glass House," Dolores Del Rio will wear a picturesque wrap of great possibilities for adaptation, that I have designed for her. Of white chiffon, the coat sweeps the ground. There is a magnificent white fox collar over this, and the sleeves are done of the fur in a latticed effect . . . In other words, the whole top of the coat is almost entirely of white fox!

THE SNOW LEOPARD by Chris Hawthorne

CHAPTER XX

Almost without a sound the men slid to the floor, the robbed figure underneath. Not a snarl or a growl issued from the tense, vibrant huddle. In silent ferocity the combatants rolled across the floor, one to hold, the other to gain the advantage. The gray bulk writhed and strained; from within the hood a glitter of teeth and eyes flocked the darkness. Presently the robbed bulk relaxed and settled inertly to the floor.

"Let him up, Bannister!" It was Toole's voice calling from the open window. He stepped down from the sill, lumbered across the room and threw on a light, revealing what looked like a sack of potatoes slung across his shoulder.

Bannister rose, drew his revolver and eyed the still prostrate figure of the man he had subdued. Toole relieved himself of his burden by casting it upon a lounge. Dick's late antagonist heaved up into a sitting position and pulled off his hood.

"Hello, Jeff!" greeted the detective.

Whipple got on his feet. "Ah, good morning, Mr. Toole!" he returned. "My voice is a bit hoarse, I fear. Your young friend has been quite rough with me." He rubbed the livid marks where Bannister had laced his fingers about his neck.

"It was a mistake to let you live," Dick retorted. He tapped his prisoner for a weapon but found nothing.

"I never carry firearms," Whipple explained.

"Not when you're calling on ladies," Bannister sneered. "I've a good mind to toss you over the balustrade, ghost robe and all. That rig is enough to scare the average girl to death."

"But I wasn't calling on an average girl," the man replied.

"Right!" said Bannister, withholding his wrath until he could expend it with better grace.

Toole raised his hand. "No more chatter, Jeff! I've got your little playmate here and we're going to have a private line-up. The best you can expect is a smack from this if you duck my questions or lie."

He was dangling a blackjack in his right hand.

Bannister turned to inspect the quivering thing that Toole had thrown to the lounge. It was a whiff of a man dressed in a gray knit suit, with sock and cap of the same material. He was doubled up and hog-tied; a handkerchief, bound tightly across his mouth, accounted for his silence.

"My valet," Whipple volunteered. "Valet, hell!" Toole snarled. "He's your killer. Carry him around in a trunk, hey?"

Bannister whistled. "So this is the weasel who killed the Prince and stabbed Maurice Sire?"

Toole made no direct answer to this reasonable conjecture. "You can buy these cooties for a dime a dozen in the place Whipple comes from," he rejoined.

"Mr. Toole refers to Alexandria, Egypt," Whipple supplemented. The detective stepped over and removed the gag from the "valet's" mouth. A sibilant breath issued from the thin-lipped, crooked cavity.

"Where did you scotch that snake?" Bannister inquired.

"Oh, I caught him by the leg when he was following Jeff through the window," Toole drew a tri-cornered dagger from his pocket. "I had a hunch," he resumed, "that if we left this little instrument in the aquarium it would turn up sometime in the hands of its owner. Now we've got enough to burn 'em both, and maybe Brenda, too."

Whipple smiled. "Mr. Toole," he said suavely, "you must know by this time that Brenda and I have not been working together recently. Without wishing that lady any harm, I fear that she has been indiscreet enough to cause the death of the Prince and the attempted assassination of my much esteemed friend, Maurice Sire." He calmly removed his robe and tossed it across a chair.

Bannister and Toole eyed him longingly but allowed him to continue. "I had hoped to recover my property without violence," he went on coolly. "The lady in the Rose Room used great finesse in separating me from it and I merely wished to reciprocate in the same considerate manner."

Dick picked up the gray robe and pulled a small rubber bag out of one of the pockets. From the bag he extracted a sodden handkerchief which permeated the air with chloroform. "You were going to drug a sleeping girl," he grinned.

Toole had untied a length of window cord that held his own prisoner's knees together. The man uncoiled his legs with a grunt of relief. Bannister gazed at him. He was small and slight, but lithe as a serpent. Even in his helpless position on the lounge there was something about him that breathed danger—the swift strike of a cobra. His face was brown, his nose beaked and thin, his eyes black beads of somber light. He skinned his teeth and snarled at Bannister.

"Look here, Whipple," Dick said suddenly, "why have you gone to all this trouble to get that snow leopard robe and the old parchments?"

A gleam of triumph came into Whipple's eyes and Toole looked chagrined at the question. The creature on the lounge writhed and a garble of satisfaction escaped him. Evidently the question had given the prisoners an idea.

"We haven't examined the documents yet," Toole mumbled, casting a pained glance at his co-worker.

"You haven't got them!" Whipple shot back. "I see that we're both holding 'empty bags.' Miss Sire worked with you two long enough to get hold of my portfolio, then she double-crossed you. But I don't blame her for trying to keep the contents of those documents a secret. Any young woman in her place would do the same."

"Why?" Bannister thrust in, his heart in his mouth.

"You'll never learn that from me," Whipple replied easily.

Toole had put on his derby and taken a seat; now he permitted the blackjack to swing like a pendulum between his knees. "We'll get it from you or I'll gravel this floor with your teeth!" he snarled ferociously.

Whipple merely smiled.

Bannister began lacing on his boot.

The man who had met the threat of a blackjack without flinching paled when he saw the grim purpose of this by-play.

Dick stood up and pawed the carpet to secure a more perfect adjustment of the heavy boot. "You dirty pooch!" he growled savagely. "You sneaked into Miss Sire's room with chloroform, bent on robbery and murder!"

"Possibly," a minute ago you tried to betray your own accomplice, and followed that with an innuendo against a school girl. You're going to turn up the information that Toole wants or I'm going to kick you, not once but as often as necessary to bring out the yellow streak in you. And now that I look at you closely, there is a yellow streak or two."

It was Whipple's very pallor that brought out this sudden observation. With the blood drained from his face, a slight but unmistakable tinge of yellow had come over it; not the swart brown of a southern European, but yellow—the color of the orient.

"Give it to him, Bannister!" snarled Toole.

Bannister seized the man by the shoulders and twisted him around. The heavy boot shot out and found its mark. "Now yelp, you yellow hound!" he growled. Dick stopped suddenly, wheeled and jerked the little revolver from his hip pocket, firing almost instantly. But the shot was not for Jeff Whipple. It was aimed at the snake-like figure of his accomplice, who had squirmed free from the cords and was reaching for the light switch.

A click followed the bark of the revolver, then, instant, impenetrable darkness. Bannister heard crashing fall to the floor; in a split second a bolt hit him on the head and passed like an electric shock to his heels.

When Bannister regained consciousness his head was churning like a motor. Something warm and wet lapped his hand; through glazed eyes he saw Bully crouching on the floor beside him. He wondered stupidly how the animal had escaped from the bathroom. Faint amber streaks of light were touching the windows and sounds of traffic came up from the street.

Bringing himself to a sitting posture he gazed rigidly about him. Toole was sprawled on a divan, his face a fish-belly white, his jaws loose and drooping.

"What happened?" Bannister demanded.

Toole stirred and lifted his head. "Jeff got me with the chloroform and then crowned you with the blackjack," he managed to gasp.

Bannister dragged himself to a lounge and drew himself up. "We're a fine pair of boozes," the detective growled. "And me talking about benching that rookie for going to sleep. I'll have to get an axe and cut off my right arm—this is the third muff I've made with Jeff."

Dick looked at the clock. "We've been out about an hour. It's after five. Wonder why Jeff let me live? Foolsy nobody in the hotel heard the ruckus."

Toole staggered to his feet. "You nicked his little playmate with that shot," he said. "There's blood on the switch. There wasn't enough noise at that to wake anybody." He picked up the telephone. Bannister heard him mumbling but did not catch the words. In a little while the detective turned. "They've checked out—made a clean getaway," he continued gloomily.

Bannister rubbed the matted bump on his head. He was never nearer zero in his life. Fired by a great love he had enlisted in the work of solving the mystery that shrouded Karen Sire's life, but so far he had encountered nothing but defeat. He would not have been discouraged by the mauling he received from her enemies, but he could not surmount the obstacles the girl herself had thrown in his way. Yet, everything he had done against her express wish had been so stupid and bungled that it seemed to justify her lack of faith in him. Karen herself, acting independently, had shown superb resource, attended by success.

Dick's head was throbbing wearily from Jeff's terrific blow, while the after-effects of the drug had left Toole little better off. In a half hour they were receiving treatment at a private hospital. Bannister's skull had resisted a feared fracture and Toole's excellent physical condition helped him to a speedy recovery. When they left the hospital they felt almost fit.

"Suppose you get the Sire place on the phone," Bannister suggested. "Karen must be worried. Go against Whipple. Of course I can't talk to her again—she probably regards me as a crazy pest by this time."

Toole was more tenacious and phlegmatic; he was unhampered by a love complex; the work at hand was his trade. Yet he was not prepared for the next development. Emerging from a telephone booth, he gazed into his friend's wooden face. "Miss Sire is sailing this morning at ten o'clock for Alexandria, Egypt," he announced. "She's on board the Thessalonica now."

"The deuce!" For a moment Bannister contented himself with this futile exclamation. Then his mind became the theater of a new drama. Karen Sire on her way to Egypt! From Egypt where? To the land of the snow leopard? To the country of the slain prince, Jura Bai? Why this desperate haste?

He hailed a taxicab. "We'll talk on the way to the pier," he said hurriedly. "The Thessalonica sails in less than an hour; you may have a chance of seeing Karen before she goes."

"We probably have a better reason than that for catching the boat," Toole answered uneasily. "She isn't the only person in New York who's in a hurry to get away. Alexandria is Jeff's own stamping grounds. Besides, he knows that

LINOLEUM COMMONLY USED COVERING FOR FLOOR OF KITCHEN

By Rhondana A. Armstrong
(Home Economical Representative)

Linoleum, printed or inlaid, is one of the most commonly used coverings for the kitchen floor.

Inlaid linoleum is thick enough to insure warmth and resiliency to the feet. It is smooth, durable, and comes in plain colors as well as designed. When design is applied it goes through to the burlap back, thus assuring no chance of wearing off.

Printed linoleum is an excellent floor covering. It is not so heavy as inlaid and the design is painted on, thus not making it so durable. It is, however, much less expensive. It is sanitary, easy to clean, and can be obtained in good color and design.

Linoleum should be laid with as much care and thought as any floor or floor covering. If it is to give service. Also, it must be given proper finish and care in cleaning is essential. Various makes of linoleum are treated differently in finishing, therefore no definite directions can be given. It seems most advisable to ask what

Fat Man Reduces 53 Pounds—Oh Boy!

Don't be stubborn, you big fat men—throw off your fat before your fat throws you into the discard. Do as S. A. Lanier of Sawtelle, Calif., did—read this letter:

"I have used two reducing belts to no benefit but since using Kruschen Salts each morning in my coffee I have taken off 7 lbs. in a week and eat most anything I like. I weighed 243 lbs. 6 months ago and now I weigh 190 lbs." Take one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water every morning—cut down on fatty meats, potatoes and sweets—now you know the safe way to lose unsightly fat.

For a trifling sum you can get a bottle of Kruschen Salts that lasts 4 weeks at United Drug Store, Victor Stores Co., or any drugstore in the world—but be sure and get Kruschen—your health comes first.—(Advertisement.)

HOLLYWOOD—It has been years

since Hollywood saw such a scramble as the comedians are staging for the role of the timid hero in "Three Men on a Horse."

Eddie Cantor's groans can be heard from one end of the colony to the other.

Like Harold Lloyd he once had a chance to buy in on the play, but let it go. And now he's crying because Warner outbid Samuel Goldwyn for the screen rights.

In fact, at the William McGuire birthday party, he was telling the world he will make the picture for Warner if there is any possible way of arranging it.

If so, it will be over the dead body of the Warner comedians. Frank McHugh would wear an orange tie on St. Patrick's day for the privilege of playing the role. Herbert Cavanaugh has put in a strong bid, too, and so has Hugh Herbert.

The studio is sitting tight. It can't release the picture for a long time, anyway.

Is this a laugh? The gossips were all excited over a rumor that Ann Dvorak and Leslie Fenton are building a nursery at their ranch home. It happens to be true. But it will house the expected baby of the film couple's Chinese servant, Ben and Emma Kam, who have been with them ever since their marriage.

What was the hilarious answer that an extra girl gave to one of our biggest directors when he had her on the carpet to find out why she was whistling on the set?

You can imagine the answer but James Dunn has asked the Fox company for permission to enter the air derby to Cleveland next month. Which is pretty nervy, for he has just finished his flying lessons and hasn't passed the government test for his pilot's license yet. According to his instructor, he won't have any trouble about that. And the man must believe it for he has offered the loan of his Stinson ship for Dunn to use in the races.

You Asked Me and I'm Telling You! Frank Takahito, Los Angeles: Yes, Charlie Chaplin still has the original derby. You can see it any day by going to the museum in Exposition park (L. A.) where it is a permanent exhibit. Other Chaplin souvenirs are on display at the San Diego fair.

Polly Moran is back in town singing "Home Sweet Home" after a year's absence. She turned down two British film offers and rushed to Hollywood and Husband Martin

Malone. Few here after a fast crossing on the Normandie. Though looking fine, she is all worn out and may take a month's cruise on the 40-foot cutter, Malone, built for her during her absence.

The Reginald Denny home-made airplanes are on display at the motion picture Hall of Fame in San Diego and are a cause of wonder. They actually fly, you know. Denny had one up 2,500 feet at Murco dry lake the other day. Their miniature fuel tank carries a pint of gasoline and you can set the motor to run for so long. Unless the machine hits an obstruction it makes a perfect landing.

HOLLYWOOD TICKER-TAPE—Ginger Rogers and R-K-O-Radio are in the midst of adjusting her contract. This is the real reason why she and Low Ayres canceled their passage on the Malolo the day before it sailed.

They've been at the Del Monte lodge in Monterey for some time now. Mae West's new dressing room furnishings include a white bar with red trimmings. And her "attache" will shake you a drink if you drop in. Larry Ceballos, who has the marital blues, is off to New York to dance-direct a show on Broadway. That man who never leaves the "Rose of the Rancho" set is Frank Prince. You've guessed it. Grace Bradley's in the picture. . . . Fritz King, one of the Leroy Prinz beauties who went to London, has married an aviation lieutenant over there. . . . And Ida Lupino is pondering the disadvantages of a speedy new car. Her chauffeur has received three tickets in the last month.

DID YOU KNOW—That Lily Pons used to be a comedienne in France before she became an opera singer?

CASEYS NOSE OUT NEWPORT MEN'S CLUB

Although held to two safe bingles, the Bristol Caseys managed to remain unbeaten in the second half of the Bristol Twilight League by nosing out the Newport Road Men's Club, 3-2, in a low scoring tilt played on Leedom's field.

Again the Caseys used their steady offensive weapon, the "squeeze play," in order to check in with the win, their sixth straight. In the last half of the sixth, Paul Moore opened by drawing a pass. McDewitt sacrificed but Bartle threw wild to first, allowing the runners to be placed on second and third. On the pitch, Moore dashed for the plate and Cooper bunted. There was no hope to get Moore with the tying run so Cooney threw to first and as he did so, McDewitt crossed third and dashed for the plate. He made it when Langon's throw to the plate was low.

The Newporters made seven hits off Milt Jones and were led at the plate by Harry Mellor who socked three long doubles and Langon who had two hits.

Wayne Warner defeated Karl Hildebrecht, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4.
Leon Rednor defeated Steve Dragos, 6-2, 6-2.

TULLYTOWN STILL IN RACE FOR LEAGUE FLAG

Tullytown A. A. proved that it is still in the race for the second half flag of the Bristol Twilight circuit by trouncing the St. Ann's A. A. nine, 9-4, on the Tullytown diamond. The firemen made a total of twelve safe blows off DeRisi and Whyno while the Saints could muster but seven off Eddie Green.

All of the Tullytown players with the exception of Scancellia shared in the batting orgy but he was the recipient of two passes and sacrificed on another occasion. The Tullytown team scored three more tallies in the sixth but these were erased when the frame was incomplete.

"Charlie" Whyno relieved Mike DeRisi for the losers in the third when Tullytown counted five tallies. In the fifth, the firemen added four more to its total. Doubles by Eddie Testi and DeRisi gave the St. Ann's team a run in the fifth. Stallone's double was responsible for the first tally.

In the only Twilight League game scheduled for tonight, Edgely will play Newport Road on the Newport diamond.

Bruin's Brilliant Backstop

By BURNLEY

Leo "Gabby" Hartnett, burly backstop of the Chicago Cubs, is back again at his old top ranking position among National League maskmen, and Chicago fans are very happy about it. For the Gabby one has always been a prime favorite with the customers.

Hartnett, a big fellow who is inclined to put on too much weight, slowed up more than a trifle in recent years, but this season he is in great shape and is surprising everyone with his snappy work behind the bat.

Gabby could always hit, and the current batting figures show that he still has his eye on the ball. The powerful Bruin receiver has been smashing the apple hard and often so far in the present season, his heavy hitting being a feature of the Cubs' attack.

Hartnett is noted for the enormous bat he uses, which is said to be the heaviest mace swung by any major league swatman. Babe Ruth was another slinger who wielded a very weighty willow, while on the other hand the hard-socking Jimmy Foxx, who uses more of a wrist swing than the others, always prefers a fairly light stick.

The heavy-hitting Hartnett is just as valuable behind the platter as he is when he is up there swinging. A canny receiver, with a keen knowledge of the various batters' weaknesses, he has been a main factor in the development of Lon Warneke into one of the National League's greatest hurlers. Gabby is also a tough nut to get past when he is blocking the plate on a close play at home, for he is a big fellow and pretty hard to knock over in cases like that.

Hartnett had serious trouble with his throwing arm several years ago, and at one time it seemed as if his playing days were over because of the bum wing, but the old arm came back as well as ever. And now it doesn't hurt to get too gay on the base paths when Gabby is behind the bat.

Seven Years Ago Today—

Joe Kohler again beat the St. Ann's team, holding them to two hits as the Independents scored a 7-0 victory over the league leaders. The game was a Bristol Twilight League tilt and was played on Leedom's field. The Saints' bingles were made by Oriola and De-

Risi. Romeo featured the Indies' attack, doubling with the sacks loaded.

COON IN SKY TRIP

HYANNIS, Mass. — (INS) — At Sagamore, a workman unsuspiciously walked near the lair of a raccoon and his brood. The workman was scared stiff when the raccoon rebelled at his approach. A game warden captured the coon and her little ones 25 feet up on a steel girder.

Killed By Auto

Lansford, Aug. 1.—Lorenz Long, Taunton, was killed today when his automobile went out of control on a steep hill on the Bloomingdale Summit Hill Highway. Jean Golden, a passenger, was tossed from the overturned car but escaped injury.

BATTLE FOR FIRST PLACE TO BE FOUGHT TONIGHT

The battle for first place in the Lower Bucks loop will take place tonight at Hulmeville when the Hibernians meet the Hulmeville A. A. team. A victory for the Hibs will place them in a deadlock for first place with the Edgely Braves who will be given a forfeited game over the Newportville team. Hulmeville will drop to third place if unsuccessful in tonight's venture.

On Leedom's field, Johnny Mulholland's Bristol A. A. club will make a fight for fourth place, meeting the Odd Fellows. Mulholland will use Tryon on the mound while the Oddies intend to start either Vanzant or Munster.

Games are scheduled for six-thirty o'clock.

Third Ward took undisputed second place today by defeating J. A. C. Third Ward climbed within one game of first place after today's victory. The Pikers had a hard battle all the way through. The game seemed as though it was in the bag and then J. A. C. came to life by scoring four runs in the four innings. Muffett was pitching wonderful ball until the fourth inning. Dick came in to retire the side. They scored a run off Dick in the next inning. The Pikers had scored two and three in the fourth and fifth innings respectively. J. A. C. made another uprising in the seventh to put a scare in the Pikers. Grimes was on the mound at the time the rally was cut short by two runs.

WAS HIS FACE RED?

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — (INS) — In forceful and no uncertain terms, a member of the Troop B team of the State Police proceeded to "bawl out" the umpire of a game between the state troopers and a local newspaper team. After the game was over the trooper asked one of the bystanders who the umpire was, and found that the offending party was Mayor Charles L. Dunn.

TAKES RISK FOR PETS

HINGHAM, Mass. — (INS) — Love and pride for his pets, a cocker spaniel, Ginger, and a pony, Topsy, 10-year-old Willard Walker pleaded with doctors to postpone an operation so he could enter them in the South shore pet show. Topsy won a prize last year and young Walker believes his pets will carry away laurels again this year.

DICK'S TRIPLE GIVES VICTORY TO EDGELY NINE

"Joe" Dick's triple with Hunter on base in the fifth gave the Edgely A. C. a hard-earned win over the Hibernians last night in a Bristol Twilight League game played at Edgely. Dick's hit came with two out and the score deadlocked in the final session. It was a screaming daisy-cutter which DiTanna tried to get at his shoe-strings.

The Edgelyites outthrew the Hibs, 9-8, and did more timely hitting. Ira Walterick started on the hill for the winners but gave way to Dick. Dave Ennis twirled good ball for the losers but three hits and an error put the Edgely team in the ball game in the fourth.

SHAMROCKS GET FIRST DEFEAT OF 2ND-HALF

The Harriman Nonames gave the Shamrocks their first defeat of the second half yesterday on Leedom's field by the count of 5 to 4. This victory brings the Nonames out of the cellar into fourth place.

The Harriman club garnered 13 hits from the deliveries of "Dutch" McLaughlin, while the Fourth Ward boys made nine from "Zunk" Keyniak's slants. The count was knotted at the end of the regulation distance and in the first extra frame Keyniak himself led off with a single. Blackney followed with a single driving in the winning marker.

The Sixth Ward boys pulled off a pair of double plays in their victory, while the Shamrocks played errorless ball all night.

"Weaser" McCahan and "Killer" Blackney led the Nonames' attack with three hits apiece, while "Squab" Downs had a trio of base hits for the Shamrocks.

Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

HOLLYWOOD—Sunday afternoon is sleepy-time for Hollywood's stay-up-laters, but it's a different world at Harold Lloyd's home in Beverly Hills.

Down by the swimming pool on the comedian's beautiful estate is conducted an unusual religious ceremony. Harold's children, Gloria, Peggy and Bud, and Ann Harding's daughter, Jane, hold their own prayer service. They wear surplices, like chorists, about their devotions. There are no hymns nor formal exercises. Each of the youngsters says a prayer and they all sing hymns together. It is very simple and very affecting. Adult watchers usually go away with lumps in their throats.

There is some talk of Harry Richmond opening a club in Honolulu, but he'll probably return here for a two weeks singing engagement at Long Branch and another at Saratoga. His picture plans seem to have soured.

Remember Constance Kent, the shapely lass who played in Bryan Foy's audist picture, "Elysia"? Well, Hollywood is a strange place. She's now concealing her charms in the garb of a secretary for Charlotte Granville, 74-year-old actress appearing as Gladys Swarthout's grandmother in "Rose of the Rancho".
